Background ===== The lectin-like oxidized low-density lipoprotein receptor-1 (LOX-1) is implicated in the pathogenesis of diabetic microvascular complications. It is a multifunctional receptor, as it has two distinct activities: LOX-1 induces apoptosis in endothelial cells \[[@B1]\] and binds to and promotes the activation of integrins \[[@B2]\]. We recently identified LOX-1 as a cell surface receptor for the urokinase plasminogen activator (uPA) \[[@B3]\]. Materials and methods ===== To identify the interaction between uPA and LOX-1, we performed both immunoprecipitation and immunoblotting. The enzymatic activity of uPA was evaluated using a gelatin zymography assay. We also performed adhesion assays on monolayers of murine aortic endothelial cells (MAECs) cultured on polylysine-coated plates. The effects of LOX-1 deficiency on uPA binding and endothelial cell-adhesion were investigated in LOX-1 deficient (LOX-1

-/-) mice. Results ===== Binding of uPA to LOX-1 was confirmed by immunoprecipitation experiments. These data were supported by immunoblotting analyses. In addition, zymography showed that uPA was active. In adhesion assays, we showed that LOX-1 deficiency significantly affected uPA-induced MAEC-adhesion. In adhesion assays, we showed that LOX-1 deficiency significantly affected uPA-induced MAEC-adhesion. These results suggest that uPA-induced monocyte- 82157476af
